A GREY MARKET EMERGES

One of the most infamous cheats that revealed the magnitude of the problem was WoWGlider, a bot developed World of Warcraft.

WoWGlider sold over 100,000 copies for US$25 each, making this single cheat a multi-million-dollar enterprise.

We estimate that the three cheat makers make from $15,000 to $50,000 in revenue per month . So - for those of you out there will to pay a farg- ing $30 PER MONTH for a cheat - AND as much for items in APB - WHAT ARE YOU THINKING? AND - why on earth do you support the cheat makers to begin with.

A New Gaming Feature: Spyware

BY CORYNNE MCSHERRY | OCTOBER 20, 2005

Rejoice gaming fans, for the latest new "feature" of Blizzard Entertainment's smash hit multi-player online videogame World of Warcraft is here! No, it's not a new Sword of Destruction or Staff of Power—it's spyware! Yes, unbeknownst to many gamers, World of Warcraft now has an unwanted special feature—a hidden program called "Warden" that snoops gamers' computers looking for any "unauthorized third-party program" that "enables or facilitates cheating of any type."

A South Korean movie director has been told he cannot divorce his wife, despite cheating on her for several years with an actress who starred in his movies.

MALWARE-LIKE CHEATS

The methods used by anti-cheating solutions for protecting players include full memory scanning, process analysis, code inspection, and more.

Players will install unsigned drivers, rootkits, memory patchers, and anything in between to hide their “tools”.

Valve Anti-Cheat (VAC)

Unable to join matchmaking because an issue with your computer is blocking the VAC system. Please ensure that you are not using any programs that may interfere with VAC and confirm that Steam is correctly installed.
